Tribute to Professor Emeritus James M. O'Fallon

Professor Emeritus James O'Fallon, a leading scholar of the U.S. Constitution, is described by his colleagues as the “titan of Oregon’s constitutional law faculty.”

Professor O'Fallon spent more than thirty years on the faculty of the University of Oregon School of Law. He came to the school in 1981, served as associate dean for several years, and was the Frank Nash Professor of Law. He also spent twenty-five years as the faculty athletic representative for the University of Oregon ensuring that student-athletes had the support needed to balance scholarship and athletics. In this capacity, Professor O'Fallon also served on both the NCAA’s Division I Committee on Infractions and on the Pac-12 Conference’s faculty athletic representative council.

Professor O'Fallon’s scholarly work included important articles on Marbury v. Madison and the Missouri Controversy. He was well known for his work on the history of the U.S. Constitution, constitutional theory, and legal philosophy.

Professor O'Fallon graduated from Kansas State University and earned his law degree from Stanford University. Prior to joining the law faculty at the University of Oregon, he served as a law clerk with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit and was a National Endowment for the Humanities Fellow at Harvard University.

This Oregon Law Review issue is dedicated to him and the legacy he left behind.
